► Arrest in Alberta after abduction of toddler marks end of long week for more than 150 officers involved in case, inspector says

LARRY MACDOUGAL/THE CANADIAN PRESS

► RCMP Insp. Brendan Fitzpatrick

The man arrested yesterday on kidnapping and child-abduction charges in the disappearance of three-year-old Kienan Hebert was found hiding in an old mining cabin in southwestern Alberta, his scent picked up by an astute police dog.

Randall Hopley, 46, was arrested in a remote area near Crowsnest Pass, a short drive away from Kienan's home in Sparwood, B.C.

"It doesn't get any better than this," a smiling Insp. Brendan Fitzpatrick told a news conference.

Kienan vanished nearly a week ago from his two-storey house, and it was there that he mysteriously reappeared this past Sunday.

The boy's disappearance prompted a massive search around the home, an Amber Alert that eventually spanned two provinces, and days of breathless headlines across the country as the public and Kien-an's family hoped he would be found safe. indicated that there was possibly some activity, and the dog master and the police dog pursued that and it resulted in Mr. Hopley being arrested in a short chase," said Fitzpatrick.

Hopley was arrested for kidnapping and abducting a child under 14, said Fitzpatrick.

He was being held in Cranbrook, B.C., located about 70 kilometres southwest of Sparwood, and was to make his first court appearance this morning. Hopley has also been charged with two counts of breach of probation during the past week, court records indicate.

Already forgiven

► Kienan's father, Paul Hebert, said he was relieved when he heard of the arrest and has already forgiven Hopley. "He's a man that needs help," Hebert told reporters.

Creating a 3-D online campus for U of A

- Team of students spent the summer creating 3-D maps of university
- About 15 buildings remain to be approved by Google Earth

HEATHER MCINTYRE
@METRONEWS.CA

Looking online at the University of Alberta campus can now be done in three-dimensional detail.

Over the summer, four students and Jennifer Chesney, executive director of university web strategy, created 3-D models of nearly 200 buildings on the school's multiple campuses, which are becoming part of Google Earth as each is approved.

"The nice thing about it is it's not just useful for students," Chesney said. "Anyone can ... experience campus in really a lifelike way."

Details range from bike racks to reflections in windows.

"It's quite a blend of science and art," Chesney said.

Bachelor of design graduate Veronica Krawcewicz said each building took two days, on average, for one student to photograph, design and submit.

Chesney said some of downtown Edmonton is already in 3-D but the university's detail is groundbreaking in terms of campus maps. Others in North America in 3-D on Google Earth include the University of Toronto and Stanford University.

"(Ours) is definitely more detailed," Krawcewicz said.

"If you look at any others and compare, even to the downtown buildings currently in Edmonton, you can tell our models are much better quality."

Utah 'angels' save crash victim

► Group of strangers disregard own safety to save motorcyclist trapped under burning wreckage

The bystanders had to act quickly. A motorcyclist had just collided with a car and was pinned beneath the flaming wreckage.

Disregarding their own safety, they lined up on one side of the car. And slowly, they managed to lift the roughly 4,000-pound car high enough for one rescuer to pull Brandon Wright to safety.

They are being called "heroes" and "angels" — their few minutes of heroics was captured on video and has gone viral.

"I'm just very thankful for everyone that helped me out," Wright told The Associated Press by telephone from his hospital bed. "They saved my life."

Most of those who helped then scattered.

"Every one of those people put their lives in danger," assistant police Chief Jeff Curtis said, adding that "you can only speculate what the outcome would have been if they hadn't lifted that car."

At a hospital news conference yesterday, Wright's uncle, Tyler Riggs, recounted what Wright told his family about Monday's accident.

The crash happened near Utah State University in Logan, north of Salt Lake City. Wright was headed to study at a computer lab, Riggs said. The BMW was pulling out of a parking lot.

Tire and skid marks on the highway showed that Wright laid the bike down and slid along the road before colliding with the car, Curtis said.

Riggs said Wright tried to protect himself by laying his bike down.

The bike hit the car's hood and bounced to the ground, while Wright, who was not wearing helmet, slid under the car and then both vehicles burst into flames, Curtis said.

The video, shot by university staffer Chris Garff who had seen the smoke, shows a crowd gathering around the burning wreckage.

Despite not wearing a helmet, Riggs said, Wright had suffered no head trauma.

However, Wright does have two broken legs, a broken pelvis, road rash, burns on his left foot and abrasions to his forehead. The hospital said Wright was in satisfactory condition.

Get rid of loud TV ads: CRTC

Canada's broadcasters have a year to turn down the volume on their TV ads.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission has ruled that commercials are indeed annoyingly loud, and will give broadcasters until next September to do something about it.

They got help in the verdict from over 7,000 Canadians who responded with a resounding yes to the question it posed in February whether they thought ads were too loud.

The commission says 2009's international standard for measuring and controlling TV signals will apply to minimize fluctuations in loudness between shows and commercials.

Under the standard, broadcasters will have to ensure that both programs and ads are transmitted at the same volume.

The CRTC said it will publish draft regulations by the end of the year, and will give broadcasters a chance to respond.

U.S. poverty rate soars to 1 in 6

► 49.9M Americans go without health coverage, report reveals

The ranks of America's poor swelled to almost one in six people last year, reaching a new high as long-term unemployment left millions of Americans struggling and out of work. The number of uninsured edged up to 49.9 million, the biggest in more than two decades.

The Census Bureau's annual report released yesterday offers a snapshot of the economic well-being of U.S. households for 2010, when joblessness hovered above nine per cent for a second year. It comes at a politically sensitive time for President Barack Obama, who has acknowledged in the midst of a re-election fight that the unemployment rate could persist at high levels through next year.

The overall poverty rate climbed to 15.1 per cent, or 46.2 million, up from 14.3 per cent in 2009. The official poverty level is an annual income of $22,314 US for a family of four.

Reflecting the lingering impact of the recession, the U.S. poverty rate from 2007-2010 has now risen faster than any three-year period since the early 1980s, when a crippling energy crisis amid government cutbacks contributed to inflation, spiraling interest rates and unemployment.

Measured by total numbers, the 46 million now living in poverty is the largest on record dating back to when the census began tracking poverty in 1959. Based on percentages, it tied the poverty level in 1993 and was the highest since 1983.

The median household income was $49,445 US, down 2.3 per cent from 2009.

The latest numbers, which cover Obama's second year in office, offer political fodder for both parties as Obama seeks to push a new $447-billion plan for creating jobs and stimulating the economy.

- The number of whites in poverty rose to 9.9 per cent from 9.4 per cent.

Canada's income gap widening faster than peers'

Canada is rapidly catching up to the United States as a country divided between haves and have-nots, according to a study issued yesterday by the Conference Board.

The Conference Board says income inequality has been rising more in Canada than in the United States since the mid-1990s, and faster than in many peer countries.

In fact, the think-tank says Canada had the fourth-largest increase in income disparity among a sample group of 17 advanced economies in the period between the mid-1990s and the late 2000s.

"Even though the U.S. currently has the largest rich-poor income gap among these countries, the gap in Canada has been rising at a faster rate," said Anne Golden, the board's chief executive.

Overall, income inequality rose in 10 of the countries sampled, rising fastest in Sweden, Finland and Denmark.

Fraud convictions upheld in Livent case

CHRIS YOUNG/THE CANADIAN PRESS

► Livent co-founder Garth Drabinsky

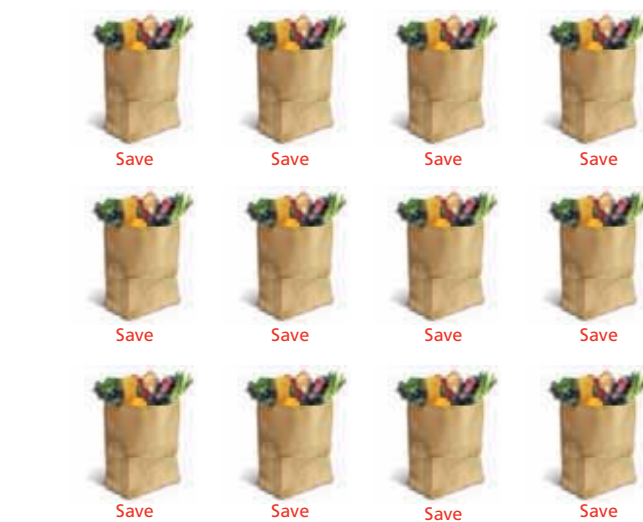

Disgraced impresarios Garth Drabinsky and Myron Gottlieb, whose company Livent Inc. was once the toast of the Canadian theatre scene, remain guilty of fraud but will serve shorter prison terms, Ontario's highest court has ruled.

The Ontario Court of Appeal upheld the fraud convictions handed down by a lower court in 2009, but trimmed their jail time by two years each — Drabinsky must now serve five years behind bars, and Gottlieb four years.

The two were convicted after Ontario Judge Mary Lou Benotto found that during a nine-year span they manipulated the income reported by Livent, once the driving force behind Canadian and Broadway theatre hits like The Phantom of the Opera and Showboat.

At the time of their trial, Benotto imposed a sentence that took into account the magnitude of the company's collapse — it was estimated at the time that investors lost some $500 million when the company went bankrupt in 1998.

100 ACRES OF INFIDELITY

JUST SAYIN' ...

PAUL SULLIVAN
METRO

Quick quiz: Who is the most admired person on Earth, living or dead? If your list starts with Martin Luther King Jr., you get the kewpie doll. For example, in a recent survey of 2,000 U.S. high school students, Dr. King was No. 1 above Benjamin Franklin and even Oprah, the only living admirable person who made the list. On survey after survey he's right up there with Gandhi, Nelson Mandela and Winnie the Pooh (even though he is a bear of very little brain, OK?).

If your list started with Jackie Kennedy Onassis, you're eligible for therapy. She was probably the most famous woman of her generation, but hardly the most admired. True, as U.S. first lady, she put up with serial adulterer John Kennedy until he was assassinated. But when she married Aristotle Onassis, the creepy Greek shipping magnate, she became an object of cynical disdain, especially when, once widowed, she launched a two-year legal battle to extract $26 million out of Christina Onassis, Ari's daughter and sole heir.

Here's an ironic historical footnote. Recently released interview tapes reveal that when she was first lady, Jackie thought King was "tricky" and "phony" because the FBI caught him with a woman in his hotel room.

This was before it became apparent that "John Kennedy Slept Here" was a whole different story than "George Washington Slept Here."

It's not really fair to judge Jackie with the benefit of hindsight, but that tricky phoney has his own national holiday, Martin Luther King boulevards in every

U.S. 'burg and more than 10,000 (and who knows the degree to which his fame extends to hamlets) public schools, community centres and libraries.

Jackie has the reservoir in Central Park, although once again I'm being unfair. She is also memorialized in a white gazebo in Middleburg, Va., where she often participated in the bizarre practice of inducing hounds to chase and tear apart a fox.

I'm not sure why Jackie O. was oblivious to greatness, though I harbour graceless suspicions. Give her the benefit of the doubt and take the "tricky phoney" talk at face value. After all, if he was discovered in a hotel room with another woman in 2011, King would make an entirely different list, along with Arnold Schwarzenegger, Eliot Spitzer and the much-admired Anthony Weiner, not to mention Jackie's husband JFK, who brought a whole new meaning to "affairs of state."

The times, they are a changin'. And through it all, Winnie the Pooh remains devoted to Christopher Robin.

Worth mentioning

What's killing us? For decades, global health leaders have focused on diseases that can spread — AIDS, tuberculosis, new flu bugs. They pushed for vaccines, better treatments and other ways to control germs that were only a plane ride away from seeding outbreaks anywhere in the world.

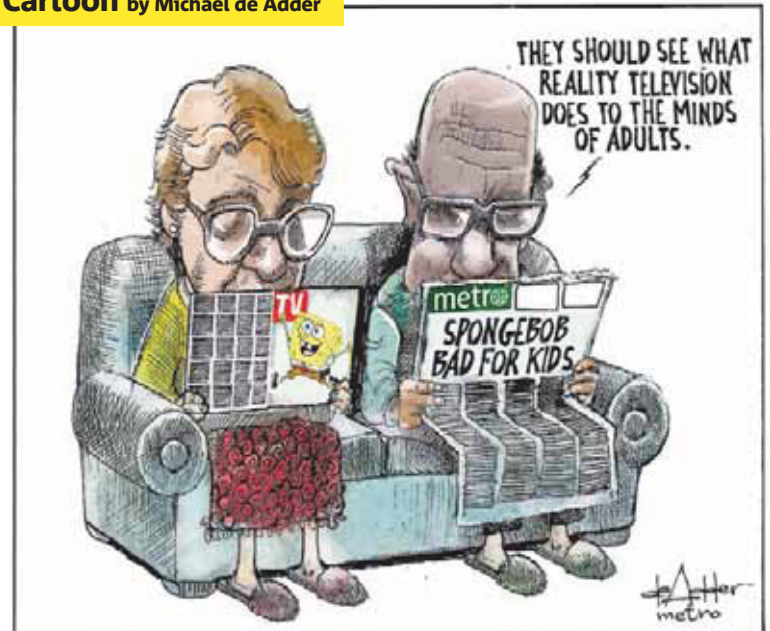

Now they are turning to a new set of culprits causing what United Nations Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon calls "a public-health emergency in slow motion." This time, germs aren't the target: We are, along with our bad habits like smoking, overeating and getting too little exercise.

Next week, the UN General Assembly will hold its first summit on chronic diseases — cancer, diabetes, and heart and lung disease. Those account for nearly two-thirds of deaths worldwide, or about 36 million. In the United States, they kill nearly nine out of 10 people.

"The common belief that cancer is a problem of rich countries is a misconception," said Dr. Eduardo Cazap, president of the Union For International Cancer Control.

A 290-pound man goes to White Castle

A man is suing the White Castle chain, claiming the booths in one of its hamburger restaurants are too small.

Martin Kessman says in the federal lawsuit filed last week that he was embarrassed in 2009 when he tried squeezing his six-foot, 290-pound frame into the seating at a White Castle in New York state.

He says he slammed his knee into a metal post under the table and was in pain.

The lawsuit claims the restaurant could not accommodate a customer of Kessman's stature, in violation of the Americans With Disabilities Act.

The suit seeks an unspecified financial judgment.

Spokesman Jamie Richardson at White Castle headquarters in Columbus, Ohio, says the restaurant is being replaced and that the new one will have roomier seating.

Dog days of summer

► The man behind remake of Straw Dogs, Rod Lurie, speaks to Metro about its significance

SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

The year 1971 was a watershed time for new cinema. Films like A Clockwork Orange, Dirty Harry and Straw Dogs pushed the boundaries of what was acceptable on the silver screen.

None are passive films. Each brims with the obsessions of their makers, and for that each was the subject of controversy and censorship.

Eventually they became accepted by the mainstream.

A Clockwork Orange has become a cultural touchstone, with everyone from Lady Gaga to David Bowie to Kylie Minogue, who dressed in a black bowler hat and a white jumpsuit on tour in 2002, paying tribute.

"This was an era in which people were searching for answers to the madness that was going on around them."

ROD LURIE

► Drew Powell as Bic, James Marsden as David Sumner and Billy Lush as Chris star in Straw Dogs.

It was even played at the Cannes Film Festival and released on Blu Ray to mark its 40th anniversary. Dirty Harry is on constant rotation on television and Rod Lurie's remake of the Sam Peckinpah film Straw Dogs hits screens this weekend.

The movie stars James Marsden and Kate Bosworth as David and Amy Sumner, a big city couple who move back to her hometown on the Mississippi Gulf Coast.

Tensions with some of the locals (including True Blood's Alexander Skarsgård) bubble to the surface and soon boil over into violence.

"If you look at a movie like Straw Dogs, which was heavily influenced by a book called The Territorial Imperative," says Lurie,

"Peckinpah seems to be saying that violence is in the genetics of all men and therefore we must be aware of it so we can control it. It was extremely fascist thinking but that also seems to be the thing with Dirty Harry.

"A Clockwork Orange is a much more clinical look at that but I think artists were trying to provide the answers to what society was asking then. It was a very, very violent era.

"This was an era in which people were searching for answers to the madness that was going on around them," Lurie continues, "and filmmakers were trying to provide some of the answers. You had everything from the assassinations of Kennedy and King to Vietnam to the Whitman murders to My Lai. I think all of society was trying to understand how human beings could do such things."

with kids and a job in the financial sector. It's a far cry from her first big movie, Footloose.

She played Rusty, a role Parker called the “best friend of the pretty girl.” The movie and its fancy footwork earned her a Best Young Supporting Actress in a Motion Picture Musical, Comedy, Adventure or Drama nomination at the Sixth Annual Youth in Film Awards.

A few forgettable films followed like Firstborn — described as a “heavy-handed suburban sitcom” — Girls Just Want to Have Fun — called “a total wannabe in the realm of ‘80s teen flicks” — and Flight of the Navigator, which features the voice of Pee Wee Herman as a robot.

“Um, it's just a model who speaks,” she explains. “You know, and she points at things like merchandise, you know, like a car or washer and dryer. Sometimes it's something really small, you know, like, like a book or fine art print.”

The movie broke her out of the teen movie mode and displayed her deft comic timing, which was put to great use in Honeymoon in Vegas opposite Nic Cage. A few flops later she appeared in the critically acclaimed Ed Wood with Johnny Depp. Playing the much put-up-on girlfriend of the world's worst director, she calls the actors and crew of his film Bride of the Monster “the usual cast of misfits and dope addicts.”

Her most spectacular pre-Sex and the City role, however, is in Mars Attacks. In it she plays a flighty talk show host, who literally becomes a talking head when she is beheaded by aliens.

Aniston's mom suffers a stroke

- Star reportedly visiting her mom in hospital
- Actress and her mom have had rocky relationship

Jennifer Aniston's mom, Nancy Dow, was reportedly hospitalized recently after suffering a stroke, according to the Daily Mail.

"She's in the hospital. She's fabulous, a very nice lady. She's also very private," a source says of Dow, who is said to be unable to speak and in serious condition.

Aniston reportedly visited the hospital with Justin Theroux at her side.

Aniston and Dow were on the outs for many years, with the actress not even inviting her mother to her 2000 wedding to Brad Pitt, though they reportedly reconciled in 2008.

Aniston's rep would only say that it was a private family matter.

Fox up for being a mom

Megan Fox is up for being a mom, but first she needs to pad out her bank account. "I want to have children. I've always wanted kids," she tells Amica magazine.

"I have a number in my mind of what amount of money I want in the bank so that I can protect my child's future."

While she's saving, she's also ditching her vegan diet.

"For a year and a half, until about four months ago, I followed a strict vegan diet based on raw fruits and vegetables, no bread, sugar and coffee. But I had lost too much weight," she says. ● METRO

Travel in brief

Authors will be taking to the water on Sept. 25 for readings at the Word on the Street book and magazine festival in Halifax. French food, culture await in St. Pierre & Miquelon

MIKE WERT, THE CANADIAN PRESS

► The islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon offer a taste of France, just a short ferry ride off the coast of Newfoundland

This tiny collection of islands, about 25 kilometres from Fortune, N.L., has a total population of around 7,000 people. It is all that remains of colonial New France.

A former strategic land base for the once lucrative cod fishery, the French government now pays about $65 million a year in subsidies to sustain the islands — its only toehold in North America. St. Pierre and Miquelon were returned to France in 1815 after several stints of British occupation.

Today, residents speak French, deal in Euros and rely heavily on government jobs, fishing and tourism.

The smallest of the islands, St. Pierre, is also the most populated, with colourful clapboard homes on tidy, winding streets that are home to about 6,000 people. Restaurants and bakeries bustle with foreigners in summer.

History buffs won't want to miss the L'Arche museum in the centre of town, where a guillotine similar to one used in 1889 is housed.

The eerie killing machine is on display next to the museum's main staircase.

The only soul to die by guillotine in North America was a fisherman convicted of murdering a fishing boat captain. He was beheaded in St. Pierre on Aug. 24, 1889. It is said that local people were so disgusted the guillotine was never used again.

On the lighter side, visitors can also soak up rich tales of rum-running and gangsters, as St. Pierre became the ideal base for booze shipments to a very thirsty North America during Prohibition in the 1920s.

The North American alcohol ban was a bonanza for the fishing town until Prohibition ended in the United States in 1933. Dry laws were repealed in most of Canada several years earlier, depending on the province.

"A lot of people earned a lot of money during those years in St. Pierre and Miquelon," said Lauriane Detcheverry, a spokeswoman for the L'Arche museum.

"But in St. Pierre it wasn't illegal. People selling alcohol here weren't doing something wrong."

Some of the island's most oft-told yarns hail from those heady days.

Just down the street from the museum is the historic Hotel Robert where, according to local lore, Al Capone stayed during a visit to check on liquor shipments.

In Miquelon, with a permanent population of about 700 people, the church L'Eglise de Miquelon tells local history in its stained glass windows.

When I first heard about co-operative education programs offered at universities, I immediately figured that the work-study cycle would be an excellent way to gain exposure to the professional world.

All throughout my first year I was looking forward to working at a job related to what I was studying. As my first work term approached, I quickly realized how difficult it would be, especially since my faculty is the smallest on campus and I am competing with students in their upper years.

When I started searching for my first co-op position, there were lots of

My search did not get any easier in the second job posting round, as the job postings became scarce and my chances at securing employment slim.

After countless cover letters and resumé modifications I received another two interviews, both which did not lead to a work placement. My struggles continued well into exam period last December and eventually the term ended.

As I was packing my belongings for the winter holidays I realized I had nowhere to work for my first co-op term.

Near the end of January I was able to secure employment through the university job search portal for a position I applied for several weeks back.

search in university taught me that previous experience (especially relevant experience) really counts and sometimes volunteer work doesn't cut it.

Employers should realize that students who are trying to secure their first work term placements are part of the pool that they will be selecting candidates from for the next couple of years as well. Don't rule students out when you see a lack of work experience on their resumé.

Employees are often the authors of their own misfortunes at work. Few take advantage of laws that are construed in their favour. Fewer will challenge their employer's decisions, however unjust. Most will just complain. But, if you have an inclination to fight back, here are some dos and don'ts:

Skeletons

Just about every employee has a skeleton in their closet. If yours is so bad you can't risk it being exposed, then do not challenge your employer's decision to discipline or dismiss you, however unfair. Some workplace skeletons, although not harmful to your case, will ultimately be harmful to your career.

► A bully may have trouble taking other bullies to court.

Condonation

Many good cases die on the vine because of a delay in mounting an appropriate response. If you disagree with an employer's decision, such as a pay cut or demotion, you must immediately protest it and do so in writing. Failing to respond simply conveys to your employer that you agreed with the decision or at least that you did not care enough to complain.

Allegations

Few employees can afford to wait years to settle a case. Many of these cases would have settled quickly but for trumped up allegations of bad faith or mistreatment. When you name names in a lawsuit, you motivate your employer to vigorously defend it. In my experience, too many employee-side lawyers mistakenly aggrandize claims and then later regret it.

Hypocrites

Many cases turn sideways when the conduct you complain of is similar to what you have done. In one recent bullying case, the judge found that although the employee had been bullied at work, she had previously bullied her own colleagues. Although her claim for bullying was legitimate, she was denied damages because she had engaged in the very same conduct that she had complained of. Do not expect any sympathy for your grievances if you do not make them with clean hands.

What does the future hold for the working world?

We asked Rohit Talwar, CEO of forecasting firm Fast Future, for a report 20 years in advance. Hint: Start working on your farming skills now.

Congrats to Apple University, class of 2031?

"School funding will be a huge issue because of the booming costs of looking after retirees. That's why companies will sponsor schools. In developed countries, the barrier between business and education will be blurred. Everything will be commercial and sponsored. If kids go to a school sponsored by a particular company, they might have to work for that company during the school breaks."

"Bank tellers will essentially disappear by 2031, as will jobs like subway drivers and check-in agents at airports. Only those who pay a premium will get human service. At the same time, a range of jobs will be created to look after retirees. Vertical farming will provide new careers, as will new forms of transport and technology-based education."

Fashion and retail get a makeover

"3D printing will revolutionize manufacturing. Customers will be able to walk into a shop and design their own clothes, which will be manufactured on the spot. That will create new jobs, too."

In the classroom

"By 2031, education will have changed enormously, especially in developing countries. Technology will act as a teacher. There will be a teacher, but he or she will be many miles away." "Teachers will be a luxury. We'll pay heavily for the specialization they provide, as technology can take care of most of the teaching."

What's a librarian? Experts warn that students' poor research skills could hinder their future careers

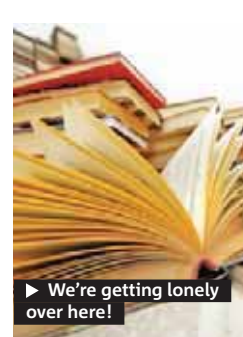

Somewhere within the stacks of a campus library, a librarian sits and waits, longing for someone to seek her help.

She'll be waiting for a while.

According to a recent study by Ethnographic Research in Illinois Academic Libraries Project, students are turning more to Internet search engines and less to physical research.

The three-year study consisted of interviews with librarians, students and other campus faculty at five universities. They found that students often don't know where to turn when it comes to doing real research within the library. In fact, students prefer to just enter a few key words into a search engine rather than pour through academic journals and encyclopedias.

The concept of using a librarian for academic assistance is apparently foreign to the modern student, researchers told USA Today.

The researchers said they were surprised by "the extent to which students appeared to lack even some of the most basic information literacy skills that we assumed they would have mastered in high school."

Apparently, students mentioned Google 115 times during the interviews for the study, more than twice as many times as any other research method.

Students aren't completely to blame, though, for their lack of library prowess. Researchers also point the finger at librarians for overestimating students' knowledge of research techniques, often resulting in conversations that leave students feeling intimidated.

Big lessons for living in small spaces

► Think about smart storage that maximizes space, yet looks good

When New York's Wendy Koch's son Bob headed off to Ithaca College for his first year, the car was loaded with great stuff — too much of it. That the nice Pottery Barn rug barely fit in the car should have been the tip-off. “We were taking our seventh trip up three flights of stairs to the tiny dorm room in stifling temps when his roommate turned to Bob and said, “You could probably make a lot of money selling all this stuff on eBay,” Koch recalls. “There just wasn’t room in the room.”

Making the shopping list for the first college or university living experience is exciting, but pros say to be prudent about how much stuff you buy. Rooms often seem smaller than the floor plans indicate. That spacious-looking common room? More like a foyer. And as one veteran of the dorm wars notes, you will never again have the closet space you did at home.

So think about smart storage that maximizes space yet looks good.

Unless you are able to repurpose them as tables, suitcases may not be the best option; they might not fit under the bed or in the closet. Collapsible, storable bags work great. Samsonite's sturdy nylon Tote-a-Ton bag has 105,729 cubic centimetres of space. Dormco.com has the Clothes & Go system, which lets you take hanging clothes right out of the closet into foldable bags with a shoulder strap — at the dorm, just rehang.

Bed, Bath & Beyond has a ventilated, clear vinyl six-shelf sweater rack that hangs on a rod — easy to see what's in it. Some online shoppers have raved about the retailer's Dorm Space Saver, which assembles with no tools and, being the same width as the bed, serves as an extra headboard or footboard with shelves.

Dorm gear is often grouped by classic gender colours and patterns — pinks, purples, baroque and animal prints for females, and surfer, sports, blues and browns for guys. It's betwixt to choose neutral bedding that you won't tire of, and put the pattern and colour punch in posters and memorabilia collected during the school year.

Ikea's Dokument series of functional mesh metal desk accessories might appeal to girls or guys. 'Frosh 15' syndrome can be a weighty issue for students

University and college students gain a great deal of freedom in their first year — and some also gain a great deal of weight. The famous “Frosh 15” is a familiar foe and can be avoided with a little effort.

Greta Podleski, who, with her sister Janet, is the food lover behind the Eat, Shrink and Be Merry TV series and book, says the problem is most 18- and 19-year-olds simply don't know how to cook.

“Or they believe that putting Kraft Easy Mac in the microwave is cooking,” she jokes. “Eating healthfully when you have no idea how to cook is a challenge.”

Price shock when you start paying for your own groceries can also make “cheap” meals at fast food restaurants seem more affordable. “I’m sure the extra partying and drinking might have something to do with the weight gain, too,” she teases.

Podleski advises learning how to cook five basic meals before you leave home.

“They don’t have to be gourmet, but I’m not talking about spreading peanut butter on toast, either.”

For example, instead of ordering pizza, buy a whole-grain pre-made pizza crust and add your own toppings: Chicken, sliced mushrooms, peppers, tomatoes — whatever you fancy. Use partly skimmed cheese and a jar of pizza or pasta sauce and you have an easy health upgrade from delivered or frozen pizza.

A pasta meal can be just noodles and bottled sauce, but you can improve it by adding lean ground beef, chicken or meat substitute, along with chopped vegetables. “Look for the high-fibre white pastas if you can’t handle whole grain,” she says.

For breakfast, buy some whey protein powder and a blender to make breakfast smoothies. Add some frozen fruit and water and you are good to go.

“To add some good fats, throw in a tablespoon of ground flax or chia seed,” she says.

THE PODLESKIS' NEW COOKBOOK, THE LOONEYPOONS COLLECTION, WILL BE RELEASED THIS FALL. COPIES CAN BE PRE-ORDERED AT INDIGO.CA.

NBA optimism low as talks stall

The long looks on players' faces and the anger in deputy commissioner Adam Silver's voice made it obvious: There was no progress in New York yesterday in talks to end the NBA lockout.

And with less than three weeks until training camps, the latest setback may be a tough one.

"I think coming out of today, obviously because of the calendar, we can't come out of here feeling as though training camps and the season is going to start on time at this point," players' association president Derek Fisher of the Lakers said.

Still divided over the salary-cap structure, owners and players decided to pass on talking again today, and no further meetings are scheduled at this point.

"Well, we did not have a great day, I think it's fair to say that," commissioner David Stern said. "On the other hand, we did say that it is our collective task to decide what we want on the one hand on each side, and two, what each side needs if we choose to work ourselves in such a way as to have the season start on time. That's still our goal."

Training camps have been expected to open Oct. 3 and the regular season's opening night is scheduled for Nov. 1.

Stuck on the cap

The salary cap appears to now be the biggest obstacle to a new NBA deal.

The current system allows teams to exceed the cap ceiling through various exceptions if they are willing to pay a luxury tax, giving big-market teams such as the Lakers — who can take on added payroll — an advantage over the little guys.

Rays of hope in wild-card race

► Tampa Bay surges toward AL's final playoff spot as Boston struggles

It's already October for the Tampa Bay Rays, who have switched into playoff mode in a late push to overtake the sagging Boston Red Sox for the AL wild-card spot.

After losing four of five, Tampa Bay trailed the Red Sox by nine games on Sept. 2. The Rays have since gone 8-2 and now sit four games back of a Boston club staggering toward the finish.

The key was a three-game sweep of the Red Sox over the weekend, capped by a 9-1 rout on Sunday.

"Everyone has stepped up and contributed to this run," Rays designated hitter Johnny Damon said. "Now we have to keep it going."

Tampa Bay lost some momentum last night with a 4-2 loss to the Orioles.

The Rays know almost every game from here on out is a must-win.

"We already started the playoffs," Tampa Bay manager Joe Maddon said.

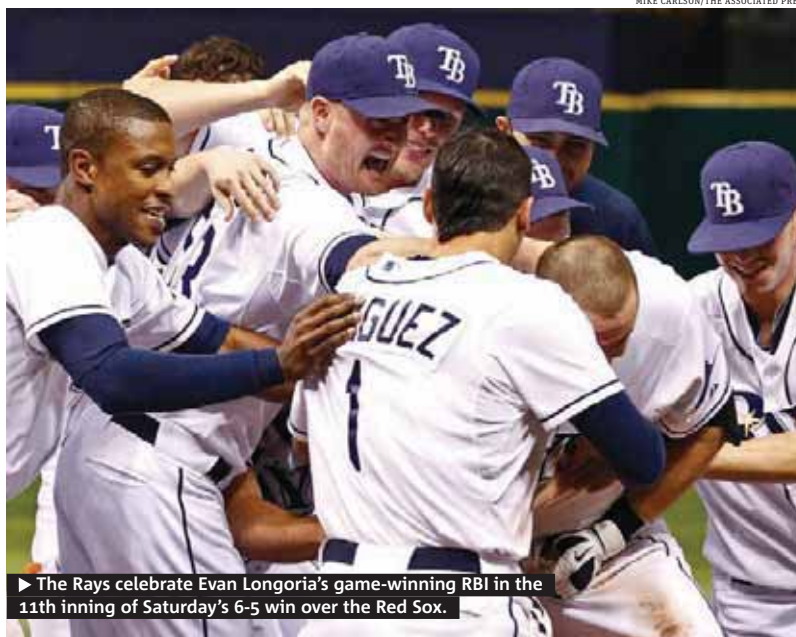

"We're going for the two-month gig. ... There's no letting up. Every game from our perspective has a playoff atmosphere attached to it. That's the way it should be, and that's the way we have to approach it."

There's no need to preach that philosophy to the players, who are well aware of the situation.

"These games (against the Orioles) are just as important as the ones we just played and the ones we're going to be playing," Damon said.

The Rays close out the series in Baltimore tonight before heading to Boston for four games against the Red Sox, who broke a five-game losing streak with a 18-6 win over Toronto last night. Then come four games at Yankee Stadium, followed by the final homestand: Three games versus the Jays and three against New York.

Monster engine

The Dodge Charger SRT8's potency has been significantly enhanced for 2012.

The previous 2010 SRT8 (a 2011 version was never offered) generated 425 horsepower and 420 pound-feet of torque from a 6.1-litre "Hemi" V-8.

What's now being served up is a 6.4-litre Hemi that produces 470 horsepower and 470 pound-feet of torque.

What's more, a significant amount of that torque kicks in below the 3,000-r.p.m. range to help enhance the car's off-the-line scoot.

Hustle and (gas) flow

The SRT's development team will brag that the chunky 1,985-kilogram Charger can hustle to 60 m.p.h. (96 km/h) from a dead stop in "the high four-second range" and is capable of a 280 km/h top speed.

To try to keep the SRT8's premium-gas habit within an acceptable range, the engine uses Chrysler's latest deactivation technology that cuts out half the cylinders over a wider r.p.m. range for an estimated 25 per cent increase in highway fuel economy (8.0 l/100 km, est.).

Brembo brakes

Perhaps the most obvious SRT8 feature is its very distinctive 20-inch (and nine-inch-wide) polished aluminum wheels that really set this beast apart from mainstream Chargers.

To haul the big, bad Dodge down in a hurry, there are front and rear Brembo-brand four-piston brake calipers and a special underbody ducting that help keep the brakes cooler and more fade-resistant.

A 21-gun salute to a bygone era

MALCOLM GUNN
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA
WHEELBASE MEDIA

Into this eco-minded age of milquetoast hybrid and electric vehicles, the 2012 Dodge Charger SRT8 comes roaring back to life sporting a honking-big V-8 engine and a serious case of nose-thumbing attitude.

Consider this big family sedan a 21-gun salute to a bygone era when full-size

North American family sedans could be optioned with a surplus of tire-smoking grunt that made its normally buttoned-down drivers smile gleefully from ear to ear while the neighbours simply ran for cover.

The Charger is no anomaly, but part of a family of SRT8-branded vehicles for the 2012 model year that also includes the Chrysler 300, Dodge Challenger and Jeep Grand Cherokee. They form what is one of the widest arrays of all-out performance machinery available anywhere.

Compared to the previous SRT8, this one bares its teeth in a more menacing fashion.

The basic Charger underwent a 2011 refit that gave it a sleeker and more aggressive look, improved road manners and a new base V-6.

The SRT8 expands on this theme.

Needless to say, the $54,000 (estimated) SRT8's performance and creature comforts would amaze its Hemi Charger ancestors.

That a car like this even exists in this day and age is perhaps the most amazing fact of all.

Never underestimate the power of paint

► Ford constantly on the lookout for 'trend' colours

DRIVING FORCE

JILL McINTOSH
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

When it comes to cars, what's on the outside can be vitally important. According to Ford, up to 40 per cent of us will walk out of a dealership if we can't buy a car in the colour we want.

The automaker is always on the lookout for new shades, checking fashion, technology and even colours from other cultures that buyers may have seen on the Internet, according to Susan Swek, Ford's chief designer of colour and materials design.

"There are people who want grey, silver, black or white time and time again," Swek says. "But we do offer some colours that we call 'trend' colours. The hot magenta on the Fiesta is a one-year trend colour, where it's polarizing. A lot of people won't like it, and a lot will buy it."

Only about 3 per cent of ► Silver/grey is the most popular shade for cars in the world. However, on cars like the Ford Fiesta, colours such as lime green present a somewhat radical alternative.

buyers will choose these short-lived trend paints, but if a colour does better than expected, the company will carry it over for another year.

Auto manufacturers face some of the longest lead-times of any consumer products; Swek and her team recently finalized the colours for 2014 vehicles and are working on the 2015 models. In addition to research for its aesthetic appeal, each colour is also weather-tested for a year to be sure it won't fade or peel in the sun.

Silver/grey is the most popular shade around the globe, and in Canada, 22.3 per cent of buyers choose it. Black, the next in line, accounts for only 14.1 per cent.

"Silver has actually been a huge seller for a long time," Swek says. "It's probably because silver looks good on almost any type of body style you put it on, anything from a small car to a truck, a large car or a crossover."

Picking the colours to offer on each model is a combination of market research and "eyeballing," Swek says.

"Design is kind of an intuitive thing. You look at the product and you know it's right or it's not right."

The bright green Lime Squeeze that looks so appropriate on a small Fiesta wouldn't be applied to a big truck because it wouldn't look right, Swek says.

Higher-end cars tend to wear subdued colours and their paint is usually more expensive and richer-looking.

"We're starting to see people open to a little more colour on some luxury products," Swek says.

"But there are always colours that will never be luxury. We don't envision bright pink on a Lincoln."

Not blind anymore

Many of the pricier new cars on the market offer an electronic "blind-spot" system that warns the driver of vehicles passing from behind.

But for people who are forced to pilot older or more plebeian vehicles, the Autobahn Mirror is an inexpensive alternative. The base of the mirror affixes unobtrusively to the lower inside corner of your car's windshield using the supplied double-sided tape. It's 4.75-inch (12-centimetre) convex surface and adjustable two-piece arm completely eliminates the blind spot without blocking your forward vision.

The Autobahn Mirror sells for about $32 US and can be purchased from autobahnmirror.com, or from a variety of online resellers.

CAR WASH OPTIONS HAVE VARYING GREEN RAMIFICATIONS

AUTO PILOT

MIKE GOETZ
DRIVE
@METRONEWS.CA

Getting your car washed is good. But unfortunately it's not an all-encompassing good.

Water is compromised. Energy is consumed. Chemicals are unleashed. Oily and metal contaminants can end up where they shouldn't. And if someone forgets to close all the car windows before the water starts, there's all that cussing.

We can never stop open-windows, but we can help the planet win a little, by understanding which are the greener car wash options.

First off, washing vehicles in your driveway may sound green but it's not. In many cities it's even illegal to wash your car with soap, and/or wash a very filthy vehicle. The concern is that your run-off is going to end up — untreated — in a city's storm drain system. Calgary and Toronto have the stiffest fines for washing vehicles in driveways, and it's no coincidence they both rely on nearby water bodies for their drinking water (Elbow and Bow Rivers, and Lake of Ontario, respectively).

For that reason both cities heartily recommend that citizens frequent professional car washing establishments for their clean car fixes.

According to Jorge de Mendonca, of the Canadian Carwash Association, commercial washes have holding tanks designed to contain the worst of the run-off. When full, these tanks are pumped out by appropriately licensed carriers. The semi-treated water is then directed to a municipality's sanitary water system, which includes that crucial stop at a treatment plant.

If you're hell bent on washing your car at home, do it without soap, and/or do it on your lawn, which means no run-off to the storm drain and your grass gets a bit of a drink.

Commercial car washes also tend to use less water than home washes. Self-serve car washes use the least — about 57 litres per wash. In-bay automatic washes, where the car remains stationary, use about 190 to 228 litres. Automatic conveyor touch washes use about 250 litres, while automatic conveyor touches systems use about 324 litres. Don't forget that some operations also recycle some water, but they're in the minority.

There is a new North American-wide initiative afoot, called Watersavers, which will certify and promote car wash operations that are on the cutting edge of cutting water usage.

"The target is about 40 gallons (150 litres) per wash," says Mendonca. He adds that 40 gallons is about how much water is used in a typical (human) bath.

Now if we could just combine the two — car washing and people washing in one go — then we'd really be getting somewhere.

► Believe it or not, but this is actually a safer alternative to washing your car in your driveway.

SECOND GEAR

JUSTIN PRITCHARD
DRIVE@METRONews.CA

Looking for a used family hauler that doesn't make a scene, is easy to park, and doesn't burn through fuel like a refinery fire? Skip the rest of this write-up on the Hummer H2.

Launched for the 2003 model year, this Hummer featured 325 horsepower, a gargantuan body, and more off-road hardware than most of its owners would come close to needing. Big, tough and aggressive, the H2 was a fashion statement as much as a rock-crawling weapon.

Look for automatic climate control, power accessories, leather seats, Bose audio, auto-dimming mirrors and plenty more.

2003-10 Hummer H2

Common issues

Ensure your potential H2 tracks straight down the road, as some owners have reported alignment issues evidenced by a "pull" to one side or the other. Cycle the H2 between its two- and four-wheel drive modes as outlined in the owner's manual, ensuring the transfer case shifts properly. Check carpeting thoroughly for signs of moisture, which may be caused by clogged, kinked or leaky sunroof drain hoses. Also ensure that steering-wheel mounted controls for the audio system and cruise control work properly.

Engine

H2's six-litre, 325-horsepower engine was replaced in 2008 with a 6.2-litre unit that cranked out 393 ponies. The four-speed automatic was replaced with a six-speed unit, too.

What owners like

Most owners report that their H2s deliver a smooth and comfortable ride that's also quiet when driven modestly. Interior space and size, functionality, versatility and all-road confidence are other major plusses, alongside a built-in sense of adventure.

What owners dislike

Gripes tend to centre around fuel consumption, parking difficulties, and issues fitting into snug quarters. Some owners wish for more performance from the factory Bose audio system, more in-cabin storage and more thoughtfulness to the ergonomics.

Verdict

A healthy Hummer H2 with a mechanical thumbs-up should prove a unique, flexible family hauler that's big on size and capability.
